A fair is not much of a place without a fun trail. Crowds want to spend money on shows, games, amusements and the like,

so long as something is given in return.

Oxford County Fair had the spot. There was a chance for everybody. From innocent little Willie to Foxey Grandpa,

Many say the lay-out had the state fair retired on three strikes, but that may be only a matter of opinion.

The attractions and concessions were laid out on both sides of two main avenues, with the rides, comprising the ferris wheel, merry-go-round, Lindy Loop and Leaping Lena at the head of the procession and fronting the way from the main entrance.

Coleman Bros., the well known carnival coming from Middletown, Conn., occu-piated most of the space and presented a small khaki city, well arranged, with neat fronts and clean-cut personnel. For side shows there were the Jobs's Midday, the Tabor Show, shooting gallery, the elephantine girl, penny arcade, loop-and girls, circus side show, athletic show, the Hawaiian entertainers and the devil chairs. Thirty or more pitch games, roll-downs, auto games, blanket and merchandise concessions made up the carnival lay-out.

Perfect Weather—Large Crowd Both

Day and Evening

Ideal weather Wednesday morning and continuing during the day and evening, brought out the largest middle day crowd for some years. Fifteen thousand is the estimate. Everything was properly set to accommodate the outpouring of humanity and business started soon after the gates opened on both sides of the main entrance.

The track dried out rapidly under the skillful treatment of L. H. Cushman's crew and dust was flying before time set for a race.

Shows and rides spruced up with early openings along with a multitude of games along the midway. Before noon, more than 10,000 visitors were on the grounds and the middle parking spaces covered with approximately 1,000 cars. Another thousand cars filled dooryards and roadsides from Hicks Crossing to a point well within Norway village. Both sides of Fair Street were blocked solid.

In spite of the crowds, the waiting line was short for the rapid delivery service of the main gate functioning perfectly.

Ticket sellers roamed up and down the highway, supplying automobile parties while the regular windows cared for others.

Counties Each Get One

More Senator

Voting Light Over State

Less than one-twentieth of the voters in Maine went to the polls, Monday, hence voting was light.

The proposed Constitutional amendment to give a new basis for determining the number of State Senators and to au-tomatically add one more member of the upper house to the delegations from Oxford and Androscoggin counties had the approval of the voters of Maine.

In Norway, 38 votes were cast, 26 of the voters were in favor of the amendment and 11 opposed and one defective.

At Paris, 81 votes were cast, 69 yes, and 12 no.

The amendment was strongly opposed in Cumberland and Waldo counties, although only a small number of the voters went to the polls. There was an overwhelming majority of "no" votes in these counties, as well as in some of the other counties.

Oxford and Androscoggin counties, both receiving an extra senator by the passing of the amendment, gave the bill its greatest support, but only small numbers bal-lotted in Oxford County.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT

Frank P. Washburn, commissioner of Agriculture, Augusta, has given below some of the changes in laws relating to Maine agriculture. He writes as follows: "Agricultural laws come in for their part in revision and amendment at every session of the Maine Legislature and while fewer changes than usual were made in the winter of 1931, yet farmers are inquiring as to the new form of laws relating to apple packing, agricultural societies, damage to sheep and poultry, etc., which were foremost among matters considered by the Committee on Agriculture of the eighty-fifth legislature.

"Apple packing law amendments are perhaps of first interest and here the Legislature retained the old State grades and added to these the United States grades and a definite provision that private trademarks, letters or numbers may be used in connection with standard grade markings provided such private marks do not imitate or duplicate any official, federal or state brands. Apples may now be packed, provided they meet requirements of such grades, under any of the following:

"Grade requirements may be obtained by application to the State Department of Agriculture, Augusta.

"Private or individual marks or brands may be used in addition to any of the above, provided they do not duplicate any of the official terms. For example, John Doe's XXX Cooking Apples" is permissible. "John Doe's A No. 1 Cooking Apples" is not.

"In settling claims for sheep destroyed by dogs or bears, the Commissioner of Agriculture is directed to observe new regulations. Settlement on a basis of damage done plus 50 per cent. is no longer allowed and all cases only actual damage on account of both killed and injured animals is taken into account.

"Proved damage to the health, spirit and growing qualities of surviving animals will be considered, but in cases where some of the flock are destroyed with no apparent injury to remaining animals, only those killed may be paid for. Owners of killed or injured sheep are required to report to their selectmen, with twenty-four hours, and the selectmen to the Commissioner of Agriculture within thirty days and the Commissioner shall approve the bill or if it seems advisable, investigate and adjust the claim, unless an agreement is found to be impossible, in which case the matter goes to an arbitration committee as under the former law.

"After many years Maine returns to her former policy of paying for poultry destroyed by dogs or wild animals with the provision, however, that all claims shall be fully investigated by both selectmen and Commissioner. (By terms of the act) (Only birds killed by dogs, weasels, skunks, foxes or wildcats may be considered).

"In the appropriation of the State stipend to Agricultural Societies an additional provision is inserted to correct an abuse which had become too common. It is no longer legal for societies seeking state aid to hire or offer set sums for exhibits of live stock or farm products, without regard to competition, which may or may not appear. All premiums must now be awarded and paid on a committee basis.

"Such are the most important measures of a strictly Agricultural nature approved by the committee and passed by the Legislature. It is also made possible for the Department of Agriculture to send its agents or inspectors out of the state for conference or instruction in uniform grading and packing practices, this looking toward more uniform grades for all New England States. All of these amendments and provisions should prove helpful to Maine Agriculture.

THE GROWING OF SPINACH
R. M. Riley, vegetable gardening specialist for the Extension Service at Orono, has given below a few pointers on raising spinach. He said: "Spinach is one of the leafy vegetables that is gaining in popularity, and due to its healthfulness and recommendations by doctors, its use is increasing, although it is not very popular with some small boys who eat it only because they must. It is probably used more than all other potteries together.

"The best soil for early spinach is sandy loam, while any type of rich loam is good for the fall crop. This crop has a rather high time requirement and thrives on soils slightly acid to neutral. If the soil is more than slightly acid, some lime should be applied, the amount depending on the degree of acidity present. Spinach being a leafy crop requires considerable nitrogen for best growth, but manure is not often applied immediately before this crop because of the weed seeds which it carries. Fertilizer recommendations are for applications of 1,000 to 2,000 pounds of a complete fertilizer, analyzing about 8-6-4. If such a mixture is not available, either home mixing or use of a lower nitrogen fertilizer supplemented with extra nitrate of soda, could be substituted. The fertilizer would have to be added to the soil and conditions of any particular grower anyway. Usually about half the fertilizer is broadcast before planting and the rest applied later as a side dressing. If the soil is at all low in phosphorus, a fertilizer analyzing higher in that element than the one mentioned should be used as the crop will not thrive without plenty of phosphorus.

"There are several types of spinach and many varieties. For spring planting, the Boston Thick Leaf has given good results as has also Long Standing Bloomsdale. During the heat of the summer it is difficult to prevent the plant from producing seed stalks, but King of Denmark and Princess Juliana have given fairly good results at this season of the year. Virginia Savoy is a desirable fall spinach, but goes to seed quickly in spring or summer.

"The only disease of any consequence is spinach blight or mosaic, which produces a yellowing and mottling of the leaf. This disease is spread by the spinach aphid, which has been controlled with fair success by dusting with a two to three per cent. nicotine-hydrated lime dust, using twenty to forty pounds per acre. The best remedy, however, for mosaic is using the resistant Virginia Savoy.

POULTRY FARMERS MUST BE SALESMEN
"My philosophy is not to worry about the cost of success, but to give more attention to cost of failure. It is not the cost of what we do, but the cost of what we do not do which hurts us," says A. G. Phillips, former professor of poultry husbandry at Purdue University, in addressing Maine poultrymen. Continuing he said: "When business is difficult it is necessary that we redouble our efforts. The farmer must give service to the consumer."

The early brooding of the white birch leaves throughout the northern two-thirds of Maine has been, according to early reports, but is due to extremely heavy infestations of two insects, the birch leaf skeletonizer and the European birch leaf miner, according to Doctor H. B. Pearson, State Entomologist.

The leaf miner is a native of Northern Europe and is being fought in Maine with parasites which have been shipped from abroad and with native parasites, which the State is rearing at the Forest Service Laboratory. These parasites are continually being put in the field. The leaf miner first appeared in Nova Scotia and from there worked across New Brunswick into Maine, where it is causing considerable alarm among owners and users of white birch. The insect feeds within the leaf following out the tissues and can be readily seen by holding a leaf up to the light or by tearing it open with a pen knife. In general the parasites seem to be gaining the upper hand, but it is a battle that will take several years to win. The birch leaf skeletonizer is a native insect which appeared in epidemic form last year, and this year the caterpillars are hanging by millions from the leaves. As many as forty larvae have been found on a single leaf. This insect feeds by chewing off the lower surface of the foliage, leaving a skeleton of veins. The leaves often appear sieve-like. It is believed that this insect will gradually be brought under control by natural factors.

Due to repeated defoliation by the leaf miner and the skeletonizer, the birch in the State is in a weakened condition and this has brought about a much earlier maturing of the foliage. This fact may, in many cases, enter into the brooding of more particularly yellowing of the leaves early in the season. The Maine Forest Service has set aside twenty sample plots through the birch region which are being watched and measured each year in order to keep track of the condition of the trees, the decrease or increase of infestation, and the work of the parasites which are being put out.

summing public if he expects to make a dollar come to him. We are all primarily interested in the dollar. Let me illustrate what I mean. Draw one line on a sheet of paper and let it represent the farmer. Draw another perpendicular line parallel with it and let that represent the consumer. Two parallel lines never meet, and the farmer and consumer will never get together with the above illustration. But if we will take the letter 'S' and put it on the top of the two perpendicular lines, we make the dollar sign. 'S' represents the service given and it ties the farmer and consumer together, which makes dollars for both.

I consider the farmer to be a business man. If he is not, there is little chance for his success. Business has a number of definitions, but certainly we can accept one or two. Business is the Science of Service; the Vital Force in Business is the Honest Desire to Serve. Some people say that knowledge is power, but I believe that it is only a power when it is used knowledge. E. St. Elmo Lewis says, 'You generally hear that what a man doesn't know doesn't hurt him, but business what a man doesn't know does hurt'. Before anything is acquired it must be practised. This is certainly true of knowledge and we must apply the knowledge to the fact as to how to obtain the solution of the problem we are facing. (Since production and selling go together, the poultry farmer must be a salesman. There are a lot of definitions of selling, but certainly in marketing a product we must appeal to the other man's point of view instead of our own. We do not appeal to his altruism, but to his selfishness. We must make it very plain to the purchaser that it is a good thing for him to do what we ask of him. Selling is a matter of simple psychology. You must paint a picture attractive to the prospect and show him how he can fit into that picture advantageously to himself.

"There are a number of things which cause failure in business for fail or become unsuccessful. One of the most important is lack of resourcefulness, and another one equally important is that of bargaining will power with judgement. As Casson says, 'When a horse balks, the balk is in his head. He moves on when he thinks he will.' Our biggest business problem is a mental one. Fear defeats more business enterprises and more people than anything else. If we do not believe it can be done, we shouldn't try it. If we are not first sold on a proposition, we cannot convince anyone else. Knowledge may be power, but it is a useless possession without will power."

WISE COOKS KNOW THEIR VEGETABLES
Keep the lid off the kettle when cooking green vegetables, but put it back on again for beans and red cabbage, so advises Therese E. Wood, foods specialist for the Agricultural Extension Service, Orono.

Giving the reasons for this, Miss Wood says: "Green vegetables should be cooked uncovered so let certain acids escape, because the green coloring matter of plants turns brown in the presence of acid. Red vegetables, such as beets and red cabbage, on the other hand, should be cooked covered as acid intensifies the red color. The strong flavored vegetables like beets and red cabbage should be left uncovered unless you enjoy their cooking odor as a reminder of the meal.

"As soon as the vegetables are cooked they should be served. If a vegetable has to be cooked ahead of time it should be removed from the cooking water and afterwards heated quickly just before serving.

"The modern way of cooking vegetables is to cook them the shortest possible time or until just tender. When we do this we are practicing food value conservation in the cooking of our vegetables, and at the same time we are getting the best possible flavor, texture and appearance.

"Any family dislikes vegetables dark and uninviting in color and soggy in texture. While they may not know a scientific reason for their dislike, there is one, and the cooking methods which destroy natural bright color and firm texture also tends to destroy food values."

POULTRY BREEDERS SHOULD BE SELECTED NOW
Poultrymen who hatch their own chickens and particularly those selling day old chicks should take this time when pullets are just beginning to lay to start selecting their breeding pen for next winter.

D. H. Ridley, County Agent, and H. L. Richardson, Poultry Specialist, have been spending time during the past week in assisting poultrymen make up their pens. Selected at this time is based upon two things: i. e., early maturity, both sexual and somatic, and body weight. Unless selections are made at this time it is not possible to determine at what age the individual bird began laying, nor the weight of that bird at the time she started laying. These are two inherited characters that have a direct bearing upon the total egg production of the bird. The size of the egg. Other inherited characters which affect total egg production and to which the poultryman has to give careful study in selecting his breeding pen are intensity or rate of production, egg size, winter pause, broodiness and persistency or late moult. Egg size and intensity cannot be tied up to the individual bird without the aid of a pen for three months after the bird starts laying.

Some of the men with whom the county agent is working on their breeding program are Arthur J. Dyer, Norway; G. K. Hartwig, Bethel; E. W. Eddy, Bethel; J. Anderson, Bethel; Louis Dearborn, Hiram; and Raymond Cotton, Hiram.

TWO INSECTS AT WORK

4-H CLUB WORK IN MAINE
"Maine is one of only twelve states showing an increase in 4-H Club enrollment for 1931," says Mildred Brown, assistant state club leader, who has submitted the following story about the progress of 4-H Clubs in Maine.

"In 1930, 6902 club members were enrolled; of this number ninety percent completed their work. On July 1, 1931, 7600 projects were enrolled by 441 clubs and the enrollment looks good for a high per cent. completion.

"This is a busy time for 4-H Clubs in Maine. Nearly every fair offers prizes for exhibits in project work of 4-H Club members. At one club meeting more business enterprises and more people than anything else. If we do not believe it can be done, we shouldn't try it. If we are not first sold on a proposition, we cannot convince anyone else. Knowledge may be power, but it is a useless possession without will power."

"This is also the time of Local Contests the biggest meeting of the year for 4-H Club members. The club members must make a report of their season's work, which must be written and submitted to the club members. These meetings are generally held in the evening at a home or a hall. The program may contain a song, a play or recitation. Sometimes the club members read the stories about their season's work, or if one has been fortunate enough to be a delegate to Washington, Springfield, Orono or State Camp, he will tell some interesting experiences of his trip. If you are in a club community, it will be well worth your time to attend the local contest. After the local contest all club folks who have completed the year's work are eligible to attend the County Contest, where county champions are declared in each project. These champions are then entitled to attend the State Contest at the University of Maine, Orono, in December, and there learn the names of the twelve state champions.

"The local club leaders give of their time for exhibits and projects. They receive no pay for their work, but the satisfaction they receive in learning that one of their members has been selected for a trip, has won an honor or a championship is well worth the time and effort they have expended.

"After the County Contest many clubs are organizing for the new year. If you are interested in 4-H Club work, get in touch with your county extension agent, or write directly to the University of Maine for information."
